My name is Akosua Ohenewa Amoako-Dadey. I graduated from the University of Ghana (Legon). I read BSc. Earth Science. The journey through the University community can be described as a long bumpy ride and not a smooth one. Apart from the stress of moving between classes, personal events and personal studies there is the question of where the financial support is going to come from. Of course, it is something that every individual will and should be concerned about especially if you are involved in a programme that every move is concerned with paying something. From field trip to field tools to national seminar registrations, there is the need to have a financial support and that is where Educational Pathways International (EPI) comes in.

My time with EPI saw an ease in the burdens of financial constraints because I was offered a full scholarship. But then again a personal attitude of time management and money management comes in. EPI has been known to have a standard of maintaining a minimum of a second class upper only on the programme. A fall in this requirement renders you a non-member of the programme and frankly this kept me in check. There were times when every situation screamed “give up” at me but knowing that there was still someone that trusts in your every effort kept me going.

At our monthly EPI meetings we discussed among solutions to problems that the student individual faces in the university community, which made life on campus less stressful.

Now, as a graduate of the university, I aspire to be the best that I can be, able to offer support to others and even more.
