

Grant Jenny Kwablah

I am Grant Jenny Kwablah. I studied General Science at Bishop Herman College for four years and proceeded to study medicine at Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST) for six years.

I believe hard work and determination are the attributes needed to achieve any goal we set for ourselves. I am a personal testimony to this. But we all need help to achieve our goals. And I was fortunate to have the help of Educational Pathways International (EPI) while at the university. Through them I found not just sponsorship for my education but also a family. I am now a Medical Doctor and I hope to impact society by being hardworking, trustworthy and sincere.

The medical field has a lot of challenges but with the above virtues, I hope to contribute positively to it and leave a lasting impact. As doctors, we are uniquely placed to not only prevent death but also to contribute to the health, wellbeing and happiness of people and I consider this a truly great gift. I hope to specialize as a Surgeon and that in my practice, many lives would be touched and through this I will contribute my quota to making this world a better place.
