

HASSAN ISHAO

I am a second year student of University of Ghana and have been a beneficiary of the Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship program.

From the family I come from, I thought tertiary education was only meant for the rich in our society and then came the timely intervention of this charitable organization to prove me wrong, that is Educational Pathways International. They inspired and motivated me to work realizing success is non-dependent on your financial background.

Being part of this reputable family, I feel honored and blessed. Not only has it made education smooth and interesting to me. It has also help build my life through meetings and interactions with other beneficiaries and most importantly lessons learnt from guidance and counseling sessions with respect to my social and educational welfare. This has helped me concentrate and perform well in the University. Again inculcated in me is the spirit of togetherness and helping others become successful as one succeeds in life.

Because of EPI, I have acquired some practical skills through internship programs we are supposed to engage in during vacations which I think would improve my curriculum vitae and prepare me for the job market.

Without EPI, tertiary education would have been the last thing to think of for me, for this I would like to say kudos to EPI for its priceless works, transformation of lives and putting smiles on the faces on needy but brilliant students in Africa.
