

Angela Nanegbe

My name is Angela Nanegbe. I am a proud beneficiary of the Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship scheme. EPI has impacted a great deal in my life, academically and in every other area as well. I enjoyed a comprehensive scholarship for my four years university education and am now a proud graduate of the University of Ghana Business School, having majored in marketing. I am currently doing my national service at the Ghana Cocoa Board (COCOBOD) in Accra.

I chose marketing as my field of study because of my flair to connect with people, to research into problems and find solutions, and to work in teams and collaborate with others to develop and nurture creative ideas.

I have found my niche in Business Administration and aim to become a Chartered Marketer and an Entrepreneur, hoping to establish my business in fashion and set up several clothing lines. This would be coupled with several other businesses I am yet to figure out.

I hope to establish a Foundation which would help empower women to be who they want and live as independently as possible. The Foundation would also seek to empower women with inferiority complexes to accept themselves and love themselves as they are and not be intimidated by what society may perceive they should be. This would go a long way to help women who have been sidelined in society and enable them to come out with confidence and the aspiration for greater things in life.

I also hope to help the disabled and the needy by extending a helping hand and give them a sense of living.

I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to the Educational Pathways International for this profound opportunity it gave me and my colleagues which have helped us achieve our academic career goals.

Long live EPI! Long live Ghana!
