

Yesutor Kojo Soku

My name is Yesutor Kojo Soku. I studied Doctor of Veterinary Medicine at the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST) in Kumasi, Ghana.

Educational Pathways International (EPI) has been a source of blessing to me through my educational journey in the university. I joined EPI in the 2015/2016 academic year and since then, I can boast of many developments in my life. During financial distress, EPI through its' scholarship aided me with financial support for my tuition fees, accommodation fees, books and other learning materials as well as stipends. They also provided career counseling, leadership and motivational trainings for us the beneficiaries, to help us in other endeavors of life also and not just academics. Through these multifaceted aids, I completed my degree successfully and joyfully.

I chose Doctor of Veterinary Medicine because I believe the Veterinarian is the bridge between animal health and human health. Through this programme, I was certain to fulfil my purpose on earth which in summary is saving lives.

I aim at becoming a Veterinary Microbiologist especially in the field of infectious and zoonotic diseases. As Ghana is not really known internationally for her fits in veterinary practices, my goals for my community is to get to them and help them understand the need to take care of animals and by extension themselves since a sick animal also affects the keeper psychologically and economically.

In the advent of one-health, I again seek to minimize diseases, especially from animal sources through mainly prevention and if the need be, curing or treatment. Prevention, I believe, is always better than cure.

My heart goes out to EPI in appreciation for its noble work in seeking the welfare of students like myself. Through its tireless efforts, many including myself are on the path to reaching our dreams, goals and ambitions in life. God richly bless EPI and its team.
