

WENDY ARYEH JOHNSON

My name is Wendy Aryeh Johnson, I read a combined major in Political Science and Archaeology at the University of Ghana, Legon. I chose to read this Programme because of my interest in knowing how governments formulate policies and steer the affairs of the state. It was also to learn about the world's history and changes that have occurred as well as about misconceptions that may have been construed.

My being part of Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship programme has really helped me stay more focused in terms of taking my academic life very seriously and also increased my passion for helping people when I can. It has also heightened my interest and passion in helping disadvantaged children who cannot have access to proper form of education by joining some non-governmental organizations who grant aid to such children by mobilizing students to teach children to read and write.

The Educational Pathways International Scholarship program, unlike other scholarship programs, provides its beneficiaries an interesting and interactive learning platform during its general meetings to shape and prepare its beneficiaries for life after school. During these interactive learning meetings we are taught how to write a good curriculum vitae to make us the best and first to be select by employers and the art of public speaking to prepare us to be articulate and confident where ever we find ourselves. We are also taught how to manage our time as students, how to set attainable and achievable goals, how to conduct ourselves during interviews and many more lessons geared towards making us the best and the most exceptional individuals wherever we may find ourselves. These trainings have helped me as individual become very self-conscious of my strengths and weaknesses and how to develop and improve on my weaknesses to turn them into my strengths.

My goals and plans are to serve my country and continue my education after school as well as establish a non-governmental non-profit base organization to help children, brilliant and gifted like myself, to become useful in the society. My goal is to become a woman of substance in society for the youth and ladies to look up to, to encourage them to work hard and zealously to achieve their dreams and goals.

Finally, I would like use this opportunity to show my outmost gratitude and appreciation to Educational Pathways International's sponsors, donors and partners for creating such a wonderful scholarship program not only to help brilliant and needy students like myself to achieve our dreams and goals but to also shape us to become useful adults and citizens for our community and country.
