“Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world.”

~Nelson Mandela

Personally, I see EPI not only as a charitable organization but also as a strong advocate of the above saying.

Throughout my university education at Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology, I have realized that not only did EPI relieve me of a financial burden, made me focus on my studies and eliminated any chance of me dropping out and not getting the degree I want, but earning a prestigious and merit-based scholarship like EPI actually made me more of an attractive job candidate. Employers who understand the competitive nature of the scholarship recognize it as an accomplishment since it reflects one's exceptional ability in the academics.

Moreover, aside academics, EPI have made a big difference in how much time and resources I had to spend on enhancing my experience and knowledge through internships and seminars. For example, EPI have provided an internship opportunity of which I took part. The opportunity presented was a voluntary service teaching experience at the senior high school level.

EPI have organized life changing motivational meetings or seminars on time management, setting of goals in life and many more talks providing me priceless knowledge and training both academically and in life. The teachings and motivations have made a huge impact on my decision making and time management. This provided me the chance to sharpen my teaching skills. Also, the money and security afforded by EPI allowed me to be more selective in how I spent my free time. It helped me effectively concentrate on completing my studies, not only economically, but also for my personal and professional enrichment.

As a national service personnel working with EPI, I feel privileged and honoured to be of use to this wonderful organization. If the working experience is nothing but amazing, then I don't know what it is.
