

POLIBU AMOS

My name is Polibu Amos. I studied Medicine at the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST), Kumasi, Ghana. I chose to do Medicine because I intend to make a significant impact as our country still lacks an adequate number of Doctors.

I became a beneficiary of Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship six years ago and my whole life has never been the same. EPI gave me a sense of belongingness, for it is a family away from home since my first year. EPI does not only support me financially but has improved all facets of my life. Through EPI, I have met a lot of new people and other gifted beneficiaries of EPI that have helped improve my social skills. I have had the opportunity of being guided as to how to overcome challenges in life and achieve my aspirations. These numerous experiences brought out a striking difference between EPI and other scholarship schemes. It served to unify us, enlighten us, broaden our scope about life and shape us into becoming better people.

More so, I have learnt a great deal about giving back to society no matter how small it may be. The vacation internships that I did made me realize that I do not have to be influential before I change or solve societal problems and change the lives of others. This is an experience that will make me think and care about society always.

My hope of being an Orthopaedic Surgeon is almost realized and I intend to give massively back to my society as much as I can.

I am forever grateful to EPI. God bless the benefactors of EPI, all the sponsors, donors and team of EPI.

Long live EPI.
