

PRISCILLA FRIMPONG

My name is Priscilla Frimpong a third-year student at Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology, pursuing a Four-Year Bachelor's Degree Programme in BSc. Development Planning.

'To whom much is given much is required'. This line of wisdom means, we are held responsible for what we have. I had the opportunity to join Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship and since then it has greatly reduced the financial burden of my family, given me peace of mind, and allowed me to continue to pursue my educational dreams.

EPI's investment in my education has made me more driven than ever to create a fully rewarding education experience for myself and not only assisting my financial needs in the present, but it is ensuring my success in the future. I greatly appreciate the value EPI has put in giving to society by helping university students like me.

As a girl growing in my locality, I developed interest in development of our local communities and our country as a whole to help improve the quality of life of people. This encouraged me to have the passion to study BSc. Development Planning Programme at the university.

It is my greatest hope to join the National Development Planning Commission after pursuing my degree in Development Planning, which would help partner with ministries, departments and agencies to formulate and implement national and sectorial policies to enhance opportunities for productive employment and income generation and improve the quality of life of people in the locality and the nation at large.

Educational Pathways International Scholarship has made my path through my university education easier so that I can gain more from it. It is my personal vision to guide young adults in the community and nationwide to gain a meaningful education as I have been given.
