

EDITH ENYONAM SALU

My name is Edith Enyonam Salu, I offered BA Political Science and French (combined major) at the University of Ghana (Legon). I got admitted into University of Ghana with no knowledge of how to survive especially being a lady who spent all her childhood in the Volta region and having come to Accra for the second time. I had no idea of how to support myself after my uncles and other kind people contributed financially for my admission fee. Later in the first year, I got in touch with the Student Financial Aid Office of the university where I was awarded a comprehensive scholarship from Educational Pathways International (EPI).

EPI impacted my life financially, academically and other aspects of my life as well. EPI organized several training sessions and this did not only helped me academically but it has molded my life as well and it has prepared me for the academic world.

I chose to combine Political Science and French in order to either become a Lawyer or a Bilingual Secretary as I study other languages in addition to the French Language. I am currently doing my National Service as a Tutorial Assistant and a Library Assistant at the French department at the University of Ghana. After my National Service, I plan to continue my education to the master's level.

For my community and Ghana, I plan to positively impact into young people the importance of studying the French language especially in the high schools. The language is seen as a difficult one hence the interest to study and speak has reduced. I intend to help rejuvenate that interest by coming up with interesting ways of helping my brothers and sisters learn the language and be comfortable with it.

I would like to end, by appreciating Educational Pathways International for their awesome support in my four years at the University of Ghana. What more can I do than to study hard, and fulfil my goals so that their efforts and support for me will not be in vain.

Thank you.
