

DORIS DADZIE

My journey in academia has been a transformative voyage, depicted by the pursuit of knowledge, personal growth, and a deepened sense of purpose. I am Doris Dadzie, an alumna of the University of Ghana, where I undertook the Bachelor of Science in Administration with a focus on Accounting. A great pillar to my academic and personal growth prowess was marked by the profound impact of Educational Pathways International (EPI) scholarship programme. Since becoming a beneficiary of this esteemed organization, my life, academics and aspirations have undergone a significant transmute.

Choosing Accounting within the Bachelor of Science in Administration was a decision grounded in both passion and realism. The intricacies of financial management and mastering decomposition of the language of numbers have always fascinated me. Also, recognition of the strategic essence of Accounting as the basis of effective Business Administration was a reason. Moreover, the aspiration to help local communities, especially women, gain good financial grounds to reduce the over-dependence on husbands for financial support was an ideal conduit for my field of pursuit in the university. Having a good knowledge on financial management will enable me to aid these women to set up small scale businesses and effectively manage them which invariably helps reduce a lot of domestic violence happening in the communities.

EPI scholarship programme has been the catalyst for my academic success. It did not only diminish the financial burdens associated with pursuing my higher education but also provided a platform for mentorship and networking. The exposure to experienced professionals and scholars through EPI monthly campus meetings has broadened my perspectives, enabling me to bridge the gap between theoretical concepts and real-world applications.

My career goal is to become a Certified Chartered Accountant, proficient at navigating the complex financial systems of organizations. Beyond personal aspirations, my commitment extends to contributing meaningfully to the development of my community and Ghana as a whole. I firmly believe that a sound financial foundation is integral to societal progress, and by leveraging my skills, I aim to actively participate in initiatives that provides growth and financial literacy in the local communities and eventually to Ghana as a whole.

My future goals encompass continuous learning and professional development. I aspire to attain professional certifications that will elevate my expertise and credibility in the field of Accounting. Simultaneously, I am driven by a sense of responsibility to give back to the community that has supported my educational journey. Whether through mentorship programs, financial literacy initiatives, or community development projects, I am committed to being an agent of positive change.

To conclude, my sincere appreciation is channeled to EPI for not only investing in my university education but for shaping lives which are deemed fit in society. The scholarship was not only a financial freedom to me but a source of inspiration, instilling in me the importance of persistence, commitment, and community service. As I stand at the cusp of a promising future, I am grateful for the opportunities afforded me by Educational Pathways International and I am poised to make meaningful contributions to my country and the world around me.
